The Passage of Paintings

Painting theory holds that each indivisible unit of time exists simultaneously, termed, the painting, that every entity in existence is stuck within the particular painting it is in, whatever it is experiencing at the present moment it shall experience indefinitely, though it perceives the world as a fluid (and has accrued the memories of previous paintings) everchanging space where the past does not technically exist but only in memory.

Tucker Stevens